

17th February 2013 - Pelorus Bridge

On the afternoon of Sunday the 17th of February nine club members drove to Pelorus Bridge for a field trip. Once we arrived at the Bridge we took off with cameras and tripods in different directions. Some went to the café first for coffee and chat. Others headed over the river to the true left bank and the rest set out for the first waterfall upstream of the bridge and on the true right bank.

There was very little sun which made for easy photographic conditions in the bush. Our group tended to focus on detail such as close-ups of ferns and other foliage.

As it has been very dry of late there was very little water cascading down the waterfall which was a disappointment. However the water that was trickling down had an almost cob-webby appearance. Some commented that they had never seen the actual river running so low. It is hoped that we learned a few things to help us with our photography during this trip. We certainly had fun! Please see images from the field trip here.

Cheers,

Liz
