

28th March 2013 - Pollard Park

Sunday the 28th turned out to be a beautiful day for a field trip to Pollard Park. Ten Camera Club members turned up for our 3.30pm start.

One member of our group was young lass aged ten who was delightedly using her grandmother's point and shoot camera. "I knew I'd be good at this...." she said as she proudly showed off her images. She turned out to be a most enthusiastic model with some members capturing images of her backlit by the light. There was a good sense of camaraderie with one member assisting with the use of Trevor's large reflector in order to make the most of available light. It was a great cooperative effort.

Our main focus was Pollard Park itself. The trees were at their very best with glorious autumn colours. There was a gentle nor-west wind which stirred up the leaves on the ground and helped with floating leaves down from the trees.

There were lovely reflections to be captured in the stream that meanders through the park. Some of the group threw extra leaves onto the stream in order to give us the chance to photograph them floating on the surface above the reflections.

The best of the light amongst the trees was going by around 4.45pm although there were still many opportunities for capturing lovely images in neighbouring Waterlea Gardens.

Cheers,
Liz
